JEWELL CITY

It is only on rare occasions that any considerable number of people outside the membership of the fire company are privileged to enter the engine house and appreciate the homelike arrangement of the large parlors on the upper floor of the house on East Main street. There were eighty-six present at the smoker on Wednesday evening, among them perhaps twenty non-members of the company.

Hanging on the walls are paintings and pictures, among them three not to be seen anywhere else because there are a number of the fire company are privileged to enter the engine house and appreciate the homelike arrangement of the large parlors on the upper floor of the house on East Main street. There were eighty-six present at the smoker on Wednesday evening, among them perhaps twenty non-members of the company.

One of the late Captain J. E. Lewis, last one of Jewett City's well known citizens, an ex-warden of the borough, and builder of the Riverside Grammar school. The crayon was reproduced from a photograph of the captain when he was forty years of age. On the east wall in a frame is a full page of a paper containing the account of the shooting of the late P. B. Driscoll which occurred, one night in February eight years ago. When he is in performance of his duty as a patrolman attempted to frustrate the designs of a gang of rascals who were at work on the safe in the Jewett City postoffice. An insert shows a fine photograph of Mr. Driscoll, known in all parts of the state as a fearless officer. He never recovered from the effects of a bullet which he received in his breast.

There is also an account of the unsuccessful attempt to capture his murderer, was a Putnam High school graduate and plain, every unassuming in the history of Griswold.

On the east wall, near the foreman's chair, is a painting done in oil of Miss Alice A. Brown of the Falls of the Quinebaug, more famous in the way of rugged natural beauty than any other locality in this section. The older inhabitants of the town will never gaze upon its grandeur again. The younger inhabitants never saw it, for the two great ledges were blown out when the Aspinook was built and their big, six hundred foot dam is carried straight through the Falls. The picture is painted with the view from the western or Lisbon side, and is true to the original, even to certain easily recognized trees and rocks. There never was but one painting made, nor can there be except it be a copy from Miss Brown's handiwork, now the property of the firemen.

The various short speeches made Wednesday evening by the gentlemen who addressed the chair were as varied in form and fashion as it is possible to imagine. As is often the case the best "very told" is often the true one. Here is the one related by Agent L. M. Carpenter of the Ashland Cotton Co. It is alleged to have occurred in the Riverside Grammar school, in one of the lower grades. Shortly after the morning session had opened. A wee girl, sitting in the front row of seats raised her hand. The teacher, noting the hand and eager smiling face of the child, said, "Mary, what is it?" The little girl quickly replied, "Oh! teacher, Dr. Jennings came to our house this morning and brought me the tiniest little baby sister." Quicker than thought, a dozen hands, with snapping fingers raised, with the exclamation in chorus, "Teacher! Teacher! We all came from Dr. Jennings!"

Father McCabe was in true form, and the enjoyment that was his, for the privilege of speaking in lighter vein, was evidenced by his characteristic smile.

Rev. J. W. Payne told of some enormous fire engines he had seen when a boy, in his native city of Cincinnati, some of them he declared could hardly be housed by the whole room in which he
